Marjorie Louise Shaull, a proper lady of class, died peacefully on Tuesday, February 6, 2018 in Lansing, surrounded by her family. Marjorie, 88, of Charlotte, was born April 21, 1929 in Detroit, the daughter of George Willis and Ruby Irene (Davis) Freed. She graduated from Charlotte High School and briefly attended Western Michigan University before marrying Richard J. Shaull and settling in Charlotte. Marjorie worked at Michigan National Bank before working side-by-side with her husband at Shaull and Shaull for over 40 years. Marjorie served as a Bluebird and Campfire leader, and was a long-time member of the First Congregational Church of Charlotte and the Blanche Moyer Circle. In her spare time, she enjoyed taking her children skiing and making them clothes, beautifully playing the piano, collecting antique dolls, and spending time at the family cottage on Duck Lake.

“ An elegant, intelligent woman of her word. A humanitarian with a keen sense of social justice and desire to speak out for animal welfare whenever called upon. I've always enjoyed our conversations, in the office and in her kitchen. I will miss that. Marj, you were a joy to all of us who had the privilege to know you and we will feel your absence for a long, long time.

“ My name is Sandra "Anderson" McDonald and I babysat with Sussie and Buzz at Duck Lake and at your house on High St. for years. I remember the black bird your mother had which said a few "bad" words and she always tried to correct him, and a monkey you children had also. Your parents were very good friends of ours for we only lived about six house's south of your log cabin out to the lake. My best friend Carolyn Lawrence also babysat with you children out there too but I would here in town where I lived. My heart goes out to your family for both your parents were very special in my life too. My prayers to you all.
