“ Lately I keep thinking of us as two stupid kids going to the movies and staying after school just to spend time together... even when I was so angry with you I always found some way to check in on you and I kick myself for not getting over it so much sooner. I wanna say your absence has hit me in a way you probably would never have thought it could because you always underestimated your influence on those around you. But far more importantly you were a part of my life, milestones that are unforgettable, you brought me happiness and so many other emotions that were first for me... you truly are a major reason I am who I am today. And I can hear you saying the typical "dont blame me" joke but youd text it to me later saying you never can think of those things in the moment haha... you just made me smile again. That's how you will always be remembered even if youd have called that cheesy. <3 I will always love you.

You were one of the most unique, fun, and loving person I had the opportunity to know and even though we didn't talk much after high school.... you were one of those bright memories that made my high school memories so much better. I pray for your family, your boyfriend, your friends, and most of all your little girl. “ I will never forget you Ananda. You were one of my best friends through high school and I still cherish all those memories. Like the day we decided to make this video. (<https://youtu.be/F2yn6Wuln4>) I wish we hadn't lost contact after school, but life gets busy when you get older I guess. I hope wherever you are happy and at peace. Rest easy Manda Panda.

The day I walked upstairs to her apartment to find her shaving half her head.. turns to me and says help me and starts laughing.. and seeing her smiling face the day she and Cody brought vi Lynn into this world.

It sucks when you have a child that dies and you have to be responsible for cremation, and you have a hard time moving on with your life. It took me 5 years to get back to my own life. I think about my baby a lot, but not every day 15 years later. It does get easier as time goes on
